College: Caine College of the Arts

Overview

About This Degree

The Master of Music degree has three specializations: Piano Performance and Pedagogy, Performance and Conducting.

Master of Music students have the opportunity to acquire comprehensive knowledge in their emphasis through research and both classroom and individualized instruction, to develop and practice professional skills and to gain leadership experience.

The primary purpose of the Piano Performance and Pedagogy degree is to integrate instruction in piano pedagogy with high-level piano performance, making it a unique degree, as many MM programs in piano require students to specialize in either pedagogy or performance. The program is designed to fill an increasing demand for piano instructors who not only perform at a high level, but who also hold advanced credentials in teaching. Piano Performance and Pedagogy candidates also receive experiential training through the USU Youth Conservatory, a pre-college piano program providing instruction to students ages 4 through 18.

The Performance emphasis focuses on individual instruction, ensemble performance and advisor-approved independent study which focuses on the student's career and educational objectives. Performance candidates are required to present two, 2-credit recitals in partial fulfillment of this degree.

The Conducting emphasis focuses on ensemble performance, advanced conducting and rehearsal techniques, repertory and literature, and advisor-approved independent study which focuses on the student's career and educational objectives. Individual recital(s) and/or Research and Presentation project(s) are required of Conducting emphasis candidates.

Specific questions about each emphasis and course of study should be directed to the graduate faculty in the preferred emphasis.

Career Options

Graduates with the MM typically pursue careers as piano teachers and performers. They are also prepared to pursue doctoral degrees; either the doctor of musical arts (DMA), which is focused on performance, or the doctor of philosophy (PhD), which focuses more on academia.
