

We at Patheos have some exciting news. On November 12th, 2009, we announced the launch of Faith on Campus: A Video Contest, where students 18 and over are encouraged to submit videos with their personal views on faith. This video challenge will ask students to describe their faith via video for one of three identified video categories for a chance at winning $2500.

Patheos has partnered with On Faith, an online feature from The Washington Post and Newsweek, to promote the contest, which will run through January 31st. During that time, students can submit videos to the Patheos micro-site www.patheos.com/contest/information.

In February, Patheos will award the top video submission a $2,500 cash prize. Additionally, prizes valued at $1,000 each will also be awarded for the following three categories:

- Why I am a [fill in your faith]
- How I live my beliefs on campus
- Rituals and practices of my faith

We welcome your support in promoting the Faith on Campus contest to your contacts, students and faculty and are happy to provide any information necessary to assist. A poster to promote the contest is attached below.

Click here to read the full press release.

Click here to see a video of Sally Quinn of the Washington Post and Leo Brunnick, CEO of Patheos.

Click here to download the Video Contest Poster

We also encourage you to follow Patheos:

For additional information or questions regarding the promotion of this contest, please contact us at VideoContest@patheos.com