

Whose Life Is It Anyway?

WHO AM I?" "WHERE AM I GOING?" "WHY AM I DOING THIS?"

These are important questions that you ask yourself at various times throughout your life. The answers, which are significant life decisions, will determine what major you study in college, what kinds of jobs you take, what kind of employers you work for, who your friends are, who you marry, what your priorities are, etc.

While many of us spend a good deal of time and energy trying to answer the question of who we are and where are we going, we may forget to look closely at where and how we derive meaning in our life - that is, assess the values that drive our life decisions. This is an important process because values are not rigid; they shift and change as we mature.

CLARIFYING OUR VALUES

Psychologist Carl Rogers stated, "Clarifying your values is the essential first step towards a richer, fuller, more productive life." In a diverse environment such as college, you continually face new experiences and challenges. How you choose to respond to these situations and the decisions you make will be influenced by your values. So, this is an excellent time to take a close look at what you value and whether it fits with who you are now.

This process of value clarification is a "must-do" activity if you are to become autonomous. And becoming autonomous is what college is all about: acquiring new knowledge with which to evaluate your world; acquiring new skills so that you can live independently; developing decision-making abilities that allow you to weigh options and choose those that are healthy for you. Becoming actively aware of what you value allows you to question, search, decide, and act. Consciously knowing your values will allow you to respond to life, not just react to it. That is, when you are faced with tough decisions, you can respond with complete information and awareness, and not just do something a certain way because that is what you or other people in your life have done before.

THERE ARE NO "RIGHT" OR "WRONG" ANSWERS

You derive meaning in your life from different sources and activities. Clarifying your values allows you to consciously acknowledge those sources and activities. The process allows you to determine what you expect from yourself, as compared to what others expect from you - a critical step toward autonomy.

There are no right or wrong answers. The self-assessment exercises that follow are simply "lanterns" - helping to light the path during your journey of personal growth and development.

VALUES APPRAISAL SCALE

This scale provides a brief, simple means of appraising your values. You will read 100 statements indicative of 10 defined values (on the following page).

- If a statement is DEFINITELY TRUE, write a 10 in the blank
- If a statement is MOSTLY TRUE, write 7 in the blank.
- If a statement is true or false some of the time, making you UNDECIDED, write 5 in the blank.
- If a statement is MOSTLY FALSE, write 3 in the blank.
- If a statement is DEFINITELY FALSE, write 0 in the blank.
