Holiday break – What You Should Know?

Congratulations on completing the semester! Both you and your student most likely will have a lot of catching up to do. Most USU students, parents, and family members have adjusted to life in college. No matter when you start, college is a transition for everyone. The transition into college means that all parties involved have changed to some extent. Sometimes these changes are subtle, and other times you notice changes in dietary preferences, perhaps a sudden interest in politics, or maybe your student has expressed concerns with some aspects of college. We have included several articles and reminders in this newsletter below to help you sift through some of these college transitional changes.

Here are some articles to help you navigate the holidays with your student:

- Home for the Holidays; What to expect when college kids come home for a break
- Family Holiday Traditions: How to adjust when you have a child in college
- Who’s the Stranger Home from College for the Holidays?
